

AROUND THE WORLD – IN 80 DAYS!

In 1872, the English gentleman Phileas Fogg accepted a challenge from his friends in the Reform Club. He was to do the impossible, - he was to travel around the world in not more than 80 days.

Phileas Fogg lived a quiet life until his friends in the Reform Club doubted his claim that he could travel around the world in 80 days. This quickly triggered a bet with £20,000 in the pot.

Therefore, that same evening, Fogg leaves with his new servant Passepartout, who was to become his loyal companion around the world. Their first departure was towards Dover and Calais. They also got an uninvited companion in police officer Fix. This was because Fogg was suspected of a bank robbery that had happened only a few days before the trip took place.

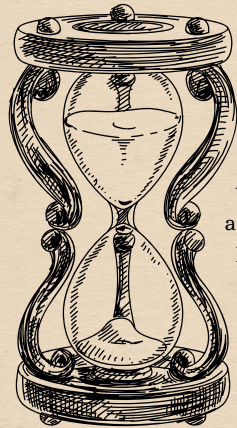

With police officer Fix hot on his heels, the trip continued. The journey from Bombay to Calcutta took place on the back of an elephant. From Hong Kong, the journey was supposed to continue to Yokohama in Japan, but it turned out that the ship that was supposed to transport them had sailed the night before the scheduled departure. Fogg was therefore left in Hong Kong. Solution-oriented as he was, Fogg hired a pilot boat to catch up with the original ship. This was successful as he managed to reach Yokohama on November 13th, - barely on time.

From Yokohama, the next stop was San Francisco. Throughout America they encountered great challenges, including large herds of bison and wild Indians. This meant that they did not reach the steamship that was to bring them from New York to Liverpool. Fogg therefore bought a steamship that would transport them across the ocean. With the help of the newly purchased steamship, they managed to reach Liverpool in time on December 20th. Here, at last, Fix was ready to arrest Fogg, who thus ended up in prison. During prison stay, it became known that the real bank robber had been arrested several days before, but the arrest had caused Fogg to miss the train that was supposed to take them to London. He therefore ordered a new train, which resulted in Fogg arriving in London 15 minutes late to reach the Reform Club by the deadline. He therefore went home deeply disappointed.

The following day started with Aouda proposing to Fogg. The servant Passepartout was therefore asked to book the wedding for the following Monday with Reverend Samuel Wilson. Passepartout came running back with astonishing news. It turned out that they had not arrived on a Saturday as they had originally thought, but on Friday. Fogg had, without knowing it, saved a whole day by traveling around the world eastward. With 10 minutes remaining to the real deadline, Fogg therefore ran towards the Reform Club and reached the agreed time with only seconds remaining. Against all odds, Phileas Fogg had therefore managed to travel around the world in 80 days. In addition, he had found a beautiful wife named Aouda.

DID YOU KNOW...

It was a news article, which pointed out that it was possible to travel around the world in less than 90 days, that gave Jules Verne the idea for the story of Phileas Fogg. After reading the article, Jules Verne immediately began to imagine the people he would like to make such a perilous journey with. From Jules Verne's homeroom, the characters of Phileas Fogg and the servant Passepartout were created with use of cardboard figures that he moved around on a massive world map he had on the wall. Already one year later, the book was written.
